Dear Alan,

This was the first specimen of Petridiobius arcticus I have seen this far inland, I think also the highest elevation I have seen it (2066 m).

Sincerely,

Matt

Matt,

Interesting. I thought Petridiobius was only coastal. Would be nice to get DNA from that specimen at some point, if it's possible.

Dear Alan,

You would need to inquire of Claudia Copley at Royal BC Museum (CC'd on this e-mail). It is an RBCM specimen that I would be returning to them soon. There is only a single female, so they may not be willing to allow destructive sampling from it.

Sincerely,

Matt

That would not be an issue- we have been cooperating with the Barcode of Life people and others with many other taxa already.

We should get going on this though, since it has already been in 70% EtOH since 2009.

Matt- if you want to slip a leg or 2 into a vial of 100% and forward it along to Alan, go right ahead. That way we do not have to formalize another loan of the specimen.

Claudia, thanks very much for the go ahead to use part of that specimen.

Matt, it would be great if you could send me a couple of legs in 100% ethanol.

Dear Alan and Claudia,

I will send two legs from this specimen to Alan in 100% ethanol.

Sincerely,

Matt

Dear Alan,

Two legs from bristletail specimen RBCM/Claudia Copley # CC09-24 (KNWR:Ento:8801) are in a vial in a box in the mailbag to be shipped out to you today via USPS. Loan documentation is attached. I also took a couple of photographs of the specimen before removing the two legs, linked to to the specimen from its specimen page (URI below).
